

Data Shows 1 in 3 New Zealanders are Nervous About COVID-19 Vaccines

The Ministry of Health surveyed around 1,400 participants in September of 2020 and again in December of 2020. Majority of participants (69%) are ready to take a “well tested and well approved” vaccine.

Nearly a quarter of respondents were nervous about the vaccine or indicated that they would be unlikely to receive a vaccine when offered. Another 16% of respondents will not accept a vaccine if offered.

Interestingly, there is an increase in vaccine hesitancy between September and December of 2020. Women, lower-income households, lower educational backgrounds, and parents with children in the house were all more likely to not take a vaccine. Safety is the major reason for hesitancy towards the vaccine.
