

GMO Apples Are Sold On Amazon

GMO Arctic apples are being sold on Amazon. There is no notice that the food is GMO. There's nothing illegal about this; GMO foods do not have to be labeled.

If you're wondering what they look like and what to watch out for, here they are:

Arctic apples have been genetically engineered not to brown. They are devoid of the enzyme that causes apples to oxidize when the flesh comes in contact with air. Retailers, restaurants, and other foodservice sectors have expressed interest in using the GMO apples. Expect to see them in hospitals, restaurants, schools, vending machines, and anywhere you may see presliced apples.

Right now three new genetically engineered, non-browning apples have been approved: Golden Delicious, Granny Smith, and recently the addition of the Fuji. Gala apples are next. Only Golden and Granny trees have been in the ground long enough to produce fruit in commercial quantities by next fall.

Recommended:

- How to Avoid GMO Apples
- Understanding and Detoxifying Genetically Modified Foods
- Doctors Against GMOs – Hear From Those Who Have Done the Research