Tyson Foods Recalls Nearly 12 Million Pounds of Chicken Strips Over Metal Contamination

On January 30th Tyson recalled 36,420 pounds of chicken nuggets due to potential rubber contamination. On March 22 Tyson Foods recalled approximately 69,000 pounds of frozen, ready-to-eat chicken strips

Now Tyson is recalling more of their chicken strips for a total of 11.8 million pounds due to pieces of metal found in the product by consumers.

This is an addition to the chicken strips the company recalled in March. Tyson said the additionally recalled chicken strips were manufactured at the same location that the initial batch was made, with before-use dates between Oct. 1, 2019, and March 7, 2020.

Tyson says that the majority of the chicken strips have already been consumed without any known incidents.

The top three meat producers (Tyson, Perdue, Pilgrim's Pride) have issued multiple recalls For beef and chicken due to metal, plastic, rubber, and wood contamination.

Recommended: How to Detoxify and Heal the Lymphatic System