

Workers on Strike After Vaccine Mandates

Thousands of municipal workers in New York City have taken unpaid leave as the city's vaccine mandates take effect.

American airlines experienced flight cancelations and delays as mandates took place.

Supply chain problems are occurring as truckers and warehouse workers refuse to work under vaccine mandates, and many health care workers have resigned.

Vermont, a highly vaccinated area, is experiencing its highest level of spread yet as breakthrough cases continue to pile up. Other countries around the world, including highly vaccinated ones, have concluded that coronavirus is here to stay, and herd immunity will only be achieved through transmission.

Despite many coming to this conclusion, America is still seeing a surge in vaccine mandates all across the country. Most recently the Biden administration announced that all private businesses with 100 or more employees must require vaccinations.

To hear more about the strikes, check out the Kim Iverson video below. Her take helps put things in perspective. Would we rather fight our own fires than have an unvaccinated firefighter do it for us?
